

The William Jeffreys house stands on a rise, facing south. It is of two story frame construction in Georgian style, with the usual double shoulder chimneys, of brick laid in Flemish bond. The interior is of typical Georgian finish with some modern day additions and alterations.

This was the home of one of the county's most prominent early day citizens and it is believed that State Senator William Jeffreys was born here in 1817.

It is owned today by Mrs. Edith Lumpkin and is occupied by tenants on her farm.

The chimney stacks are modern day replacements, another tribute to Hurricane Hazel of 1954.

The Jeffreys house is located near the intersection of U.S. 401 and N.C. 98 in the southern part of the county.
